Athens Under Macedonian Domination: Athenian Politics and Politicians from the Lamian War to the Chremonidean War.

Andrew James Bayliss.

B.A. (Hons) Dip. Ed.

Thesis Submitted for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy,
Department of Ancient History,
Division of Humanities,
Macquarie University.

October 2002.

Copyright in relation to this Thesis

Under the Copyright Act 1968 (several provision of which are referred to below), this material must be used only under the normal conditions of scholarly fair dealing for the purposes of research, criticism or review. In particular no results or conclusions should be extracted from it, nor should it be copied or closely parahrased in whole or in part without the written consent of the author. Proper written acknowledgement should be made for any assistance obtained from this material.

Under Section 35 (2) of the Copyright Act 1968 'the author of a literary, dramatic, musical or artistic work is the owner of any copyright subsisting in the work'. By virtue of Section 32 (1) copyright 'subsists in an original literary, dramatic, musical or artistic work that is unpublished' land of which the author was an Australian citizen, an Australian protected person or a person resident in Australia.

The Act, by Section 36 (1) provides: 'Subject to this Act, the copyright in a literary, dramatic, musical or artistic work is infringed by a person who, not being the owner of the copyright and without the licence of the owner of the copyright, does in Australia, or authorises the doing in Australia of, any act comprised in the copyright'.

Section 31 (1) (a) (i) provides that copyright includes the exclusive right to 'reproduce the work in a material form'. Thus, copyright is infringed by a person who, not being the owner of the copyright, reproduces or authorises the reproduction of a work, or of more than a reasonable part of the work, in a material form, unless the reproduction is a 'fair dealing' with the work 'for the purpose of research or study' as further defined in Sections 40 and 41 of the Act.

Section 51 (2) provides that "Where a manuscript, or a copy, of material of other similar literary work that has not been published is kept in a library of a university or other similar institution or in an archives, the copyright in the material or other work is not infringed by the making of a copy of the material or other work by or on behalf of the officer in charge of the library or archives if the copy is supplied to a person who satisfies an authorized officer of the library or archives that he requires the copy for the purpose of research or study'.

^{*} Thesis' includes 'treatise', 'dissertation' and other similar productions.

CONTENTS

Synopsis	v
Declaration of Authenticity	vi
Preface	vii
Introduction	1
Part 1: Athenian Politics and Politicians	13
(a) Athenian Politicians.	14
i. The rhêtores: ii. The stratêgoi: iii. Other officials:	16 22 23
(b) Rhêtores and Stratêgoi.	25
 i. The Number of Rhêtores and Stratêgoi: ii. Geographical Origins: iii. Social Origins and Class Background: iv. Political Orientation: v. Family Background: vi. Diversity: vii. Quietism? 	25 25 32 33 35 46 53
(c) Political Groups.	54
i. The Traditional View:ii. Political "Groups" at Athens:iii. What brought these men together?	54 57 62
Part 2: Athenian Political Ideology	75
(a) Modern Perceptions of Ideology in Hellenistic Athens.	76
(b) Definition of Ideology.	80

(c) The Proponents of Democracy.	85
 i. Democracy at Athens: ii. The Democracy from 307/6 to 301/0: iii. The "Democratic Revolution" in the Peiraieus and the Return of Demetrios: 	85 95 104
iv. The Democracy "of All Athenians":	104
(d) The Opponents of Democracy.	111
i. The Critics of Democracy:	111
ii. Oligarchs at Athens:	114
iii. The Oligarchy of 322/1:	120
iv. The Tyranny of Demetrios of Phaleron:	136
v. Kassandros and the "Enslavement" of Greece:	149
vi. The Tyranny of Lachares:	150
vii. The Oligarchy in the 290s:	152
Part 3: A Prosopographical Study of the Leading Athenian Politicians	155
(a) Oligarchy, then Democracy then Oligarchy Again.	156
i. Demades of Paiania.	158
ii. Phokion.	179
iii. Hagnonides of Pergase.	195
iv. Demetrios of Phaleron.	204
(b) The Return to Democracy.	224
i. Stratokles of Diomeia.	225
(c) Tyranny, then Democracy, then Oligarchy, then Democracy Again.	267
i. Phaidros of Sphettos.	269
ii. Olympiodoros of Euonymon.	285
iii. Demochares of Leukonoion.	305
(d) The Last Phase of Athenian Democracy.	325
i. Kallippos of Eleusis.	326
ii. Glaukon and Chremonides of Aithalidai.	337
	221

Conclusion	348
Appendices	354
Appendix 1: List of rhêtores, stratêgoi, tamiai and presbeis	355
Appendix 2: The Population of Athens in the Late Fourth Century	399
Appendix 3: The "Election" of Demetrios of Phaleron as epimelêtês	402
Appendix 4: Pausanias's Use of the Term πρότερον ἔτι	406
Ancient and Modern Sources	408
Ancient Sources Consulted	409
Abbreviations	410
Bibliography	411

SYNOPSIS

This thesis is a revisionist history of Athens during the much-neglected period between the Lamian and Chremonidean wars. It draws upon all the available literary and epigraphical evidence to provide a reinterpretation of Athenian politics in this confused period.

Rather than providing a narrative of Athens in the early Hellenistic period (a task which has been admirably completed by Professor Christian Habicht), this thesis seeks to provide a review of Athenian politics and politicians. It seeks to identify who participated in the governing of Athens and their motivations for doing so, to determine what constituted a politician in democratic Athens, and to redefine political ideology. The purpose of this research is to allow a clearer understanding of the Athenian political arena in the early Hellenistic period.

This thesis is comprised of three sections:

- The first provides a definition of what constituted a politician in democratic Athens and how Athenian politicians interacted with each other.
- The second discusses Athenian political ideology, and seeks to demonstrate that the Athenian politicians of the early Hellenistic period were just as ideologically motivated as their predecessors in the fifth and fourth centuries. This section seeks to show that the much-maligned Hellenistic democracies were little different from the so-called "true" democracies of the Classical period. The only real difference between these regimes was the fact that whereas Classical Athens was militarily strong and independent, Hellenistic Athens lacked the military capacity to remain free and independent, and was incapable of competing with the Macedonian dynasts as an equal partner.
- The third section consists of a series of detailed prosopographical studies of leading Athenian politicians including Demades, Phokion, Demetrios of Phaleron, Stratokles, and Demochares. The purpose of this section is to evaluate the careers of these politicians who played a pivotal role in Athenian politics in order to enable us to better understand the nature of Athenian politics and political ideology in this period.
- This thesis also includes an appended list of all the Athenians who meet my definition of a "politician" in democratic Athens.

The overall aim of this thesis is to demonstrate that there was no real qualitative difference between Athenian democracy in the period between the Lamian and Chremonidean wars and the fifth and fourth century democracies.

DECLARATION

I declare that this thesis is entirely my own work and has not been previously submitted for a higher degree at any other university or institution.

Andrew J. Bayliss.

PREFACE

I would like to thank all those who have assisted and guided me in the preparation of this thesis. Without their encouragement and support it would never have come to fruition.

Firstly I would like to thank the staff at Macquarie University. In particular I would like to thank my supervisor, Dr David J. Phillips. David has been the ideal supervisor and an inspiration since I first embarked on the study of ancient Greece as an undergraduate in 1993. He has been ready to help whenever necessary, provided me with countless references, and continues to astound me with his ability to remember exactly which chapter of the Ath.Pol. or Thucydides the references come from. It was David who introduced me to Hellenistic Athens as an undergraduate in 1995. I was fascinated then, and I am still fascinated now. I was delighted to work with David when I chose to write my honours thesis on Stratokles of Diomeia, and it has been a pleasure working with David again over the past three years or so. David was the one who first came up with the idea for a revisionist history of Hellenistic Athens and the task would have been almost impossible to complete without his assistance. His enthusiasm for the task has inspired me, particularly when my spirits were at their lowest ebb. I hope the final product does justice to the foundations laid by David.

Special thanks also go to my associate supervisor Dr Christopher Forbes who was always free for a chat and keen to provide snippets of information and new references. I must also thank Dr Trevor Evans for his assistance with all linguistic matters, and his invaluable advice about how to go about writing a PhD dissertation. I also need to thank Mr Karl Van Dyke, the Manager of the Museum of Ancient Cultures at Macquarie University. Karl has provided me with employment, guidance and friendship for several years now. He has also proved to be a helpful proofreader, letter-writer and referee, and made several onerous tasks much less complicated.

I would also like to thank my fellow postgraduate students in particular Sally Morris, Peter Edwell and Greg Gilbert for making the task of researching and writing a PhD thesis much more enjoyable. Special thanks go to Sally, and her husband George Craglietto, for providing me with a hot meal and a good cup of coffee or tea (or something stronger) whenever I needed it!

I must also thank the staff and students at the British School at Athens where I resided during two extended periods of research in 1999 and 2000. In particular I would like to thank the librarian, Penny Wilson and her staff for their assistance during my spells at the BSA. I would also like to thank Dr George Carleton who helped me to better understand the origins of divine honours during our fascinating discussions over numerous games of backgammon in the Finley Room at the BSA. I should also thank Dr Ioanna Kralli and Dr Graham Oliver for all the helpful discussions of all things relating to Hellenistic Athens.

I must also thank Dr Stephen D. Lambert for showing me the ropes at the Epigraphical Museum. Thanks also go to the staff at the Epigraphical Museum, the Agora Museum, the National Museum and the Akropolis Museum.

I also need to thank everyone who has helped me with languages – ancient and modern – during the course of my research: Dr Ian Plant, Ben Brown, Florence Adamou, Susanne Binder, Jenny Gaschke, Dr Astrid Lindenlauf and Dr Milena Melfi.

I would also like to thank my friends who have supported me over the years. I won't name them all, because they know who they are. But I must thank in particular Brett Hamilton who has been an ideal beer-drinking and pool-playing companion for many years, and provided me with constant free IT support. Brett deserves special thanks for never once asking the dreaded question, "How's the thesis?" even though he was one of the few individuals who could have asked if they wished. I must also thank Kristina Giannotta for being such a good friend when things seemed at their bleakest.

Last, and by no means least, I would like to thank my family. I have been fortunate that my parents, Ann and Alan, and my brother Peter have encouraged me every step of the way in my studies. They have provided me with a stable home environment, and a bed to sleep in for as long as I have needed one. Just as importantly, they have provided me with constant support. They have encouraged me in my studies in history in spite of any criticism since the very beginning when I decided to abandon studying physics during my final two years of high school in favour of two additional units of Modern and Ancient History, a decision which meant that half of my workload for my Higher School Certificate was in the field of history. They encouraged me to study history as an undergraduate, and endured the quizzical comments from friends and acquaintances with aplomb when I chose to continue my studies at the postgraduate level. This thesis is dedicated to them as a way of thanking them for believing in me, for without their love and support none of this would have even been started.

To My Parents, Ann and Alan,
and My Brother Peter,
With Thanks.