ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

While this dissertation has been written by me, it would never have been completed without the support, encouragement and generosity of a large number of people.

I would like to acknowledge, first of all, the constant encouragement and advice offered by Professor Edwin Judge, and Dr Alanna Nobbs of Macquarie University, particularly during some arduous stages in the progress of the thesis. Even greater, is my debt to my supervisor, Professor Naguib Kanawati, for his patience and guidance. Thanks to him, my grossest errors in style and approach have been corrected, and many pitfalls avoided. This dissertation has benefited immensely from his scholarship and advice.

Other scholars have also supported my efforts, and I would like to express my gratitude to Professor Leclant, Dr Dieter Arnold, Dr Stephen Quirke, and Dr Jaromír Málek, all of whom were most generous and prompt in replies to my queries on many issues raised by my research.

However, my deepest gratitude must go to Professor Miroslav Verner of the Charles University in Prague, and to Dr Peter Jánosi from the Institut für Ägyptologie in Vienna, for unfailing encouragement and stimulating discussion on numerous aspects relating to this dissertation. In particular, Professor Verner has allowed free access to all his data from Abusir, and permitted me to use some important material from this in Chapter 6 of this work. The extent of this generosity can be gauged by the fact that Professor Verner's own publication on that material was itself well advanced. Dr Jánosi extended similar help by giving me a copy of his own dissertation, and he, too, has been most generous and frank in discussions regarding the material.

Other people who gave me the most essential help were the librarians at both Sydney University and Macquarie University. In particular, I wish to express my deep gratitude to Mrs Marilyn Wagstaff, and her staff at Macquarie University, for their strenuous efforts on my behalf.

To my numerous friends, who have coaxed, bullied, and helped to sustain my interest in finishing the work - thank you! Those who proof-read certain chapters were Toni Hurley, Chris Murray, Alan Layt and Philippa Medcalf. The staunch efforts of Patricia Robins in proofing the entirety of Volumes I and II, and sections of Volume III, cannot be valued too highly.

Without these friends and mentors this dissertation could not have appeared in its present form. I am grateful to all of them.

Although it is too late for my parents, Anne and Ronald Towers, to see this work, I would like to dedicate it to them, as a small token of love and appreciation for all that they did for me.
