Appendix

a. Chronology Table:

From the origins (8000 BC) to the unification with Italy (1860)¹:

Around 8000 BC; First archaeological evidence of human settlements in Sicily

Around 5000 BC; First archaeological evidence of settlements by populations from the Orient:

Traces of agriculture and animal domestication have been found dating from these ancient times.

2000 – 9th C BC – Bronze Age:

The island was in contact with the Orient, from where bronze craftsmanship came. It was in contact with the North through the commerce of tin (it was a station of the Tin Road). According to the Greek legends collected in Homer's Odyssey, these were the times when Ulysses circumnavigated the island. Archaeological investigations reveal the island was in those times inhabited by 3 populations: the indigenous Sican, west of the river Gelas (centre of the island); the Elymi, in the far west, to whom Trojan descent is attributed (from Troy, Asia Minor), and the Siculi, east of the Gelas River, who are regarded by archaeologists as "latecomers from Italy" compared to the first two populations. Evidence of Phoenician presence in Sicily has been found dating as early as the late years of the 2nd millennium .

9th – 6th C BC – Phoenician period:

Phoenician colonies were established in Palermo, Mothya (nowadays Mozia) and Solunto, all of which are coastal settlements in the west side of the island (see map in the next page). The interior of the island remained indigenous.

A.1. The distribution of the 4 ancient populations inhabiting Sicily in the Bronze Age (2000 – 9th C BC) and the Phoenician period (9 – 6th C BC) – Source: Wikipedia online Encyclopedia

760 – 3rd C BC – The Greek colonies (city-states) were founded in Sicily; Apogee and splendour of Greek Sicily ; Decline of Greek supremacy:

In 757 Ionian Greeks from Eubea founded the city of Naxos, on the east coast. In 733 Corinthian, Dorian and Mégarian settlers founded the city of Syracuse, in the south east. Rhodian settlers founded the city of Gelas, in south central Sicily. From the 6th to the 5th C BC supremacy of the Greek World over the Carthaginians and Etruscans in the Mediterranean region is established. In the cities of Syracuse, Selinunte, and Agrigento, architecture, philosophy, mathematics, sculpture, politics and all the arts flourished. Greek Sicily produced intellectual eminences such as the philosopher Empedocles, the poet Theocritus, the mathematical genius Archimedes, hosted the philosopher Plato and the tragedian Aeschylus. The indigenous interior was progressively ‘hellenized’. In the 4th and 3rd C BC the Carthaginian vs Greek rivalry built up again. Carthaginians end up controlling the west whilst the Greeks controlled the east.

3rd – 1st C BC – Sicily as Province of the Roman Republic:

From 218 to 201 the Second Punic War was fought, resulting in a crushing victory by Rome over the Phoenician/Greek allegiance. In 212 BC Syracuse, last stronghold of Greek Sicily, fell after 3 years of siege during which it was defended by Archimedes' war machines and traps. It was in this period that extensive wheat cultivation was established and that Sicily became known as 'the granary of Rome'. The land was divided into vast estates (latifundia, in Latin) and a huge slave workforce was imported to Sicily from all over the Mediterranean. The land was often administered by corrupt and greedy governors who imposed exorbitant taxes and scarcely improved the general living conditions of the population. The infamous case of Verres (governor of Sicily from 73 to 71), against whom Cicero wrote his Verrinae orations, is a prime example.

1st – 4th Centuries – Sicily as Province of the Roman Empire:

It was a time of peace and prosperity. Sumptuous monuments, amphitheatres, thermal baths and gymsnasiums were built in many cities. The Latin author Apuleius tells of a multicultural island where three languages were in use: Greek, Latin and Sicilian.

4th Century – Barbaric Invasions:

The island was repeatedly ravaged by the raids of the Vandals led by Genseric from Africa and by the Ostrogoths led by Theodoric from the north

535 - 10th Century – Byzantine Sicily:

In 535 the Byzantine general Belisarius occupied Sicily and annexed it to the Oriental Roman Empire of Justinian.

10th Century – Arab Sicily:

From the 7th C onwards, Muslim populations from North Africa, ruled by the Aghlabid dynasty of Tunis, raided the island. By the 10th C the whole island was conquered and divided into 3 provinces whose names are still in use today: Val di Mazara, west, Val Demone, north east; Val di Noto, south east. The army established its administrative headquarters in Palermo, where Arabic troops settled. The city was made into the splendid capital of the Arab Emirate of Sicily. The arts and sciences flourished. Castles and mosques, citrus, papyrus and sugar cane cultivation and advanced irrigation systems still bear witness to these times of plenty.

11th – 13th Centuries – Norman and Frederician Sicily:

In 1072 Palermo was conquered by Count Roger. Twenty years later the whole island had become Norman. In 1130 Roger 2nd was made King of Sicily by the pope. Kings Willam the 1st and 2nd followed. The Kingdom undergoes a time of great prosperity. Thanks to the stability guaranteed by the king, the wealthy Church and by the Norman lords, agriculture had the chance to flourish again. Commercial contacts with the Orient were re-established through the Crusades. These 3 centuries (11th to 13th) can be regarded most probably as Sicily's Golden Age, in which a just and enlightened government brought peace and prosperity for all. In 1194 the Norman King Tancredi was beaten by the armies of Henry 4th, the Germanic emperor. Frederick II Hohenstaufen (1198-1250), his son, acquired the titles of Emperor, King of Sicily and King of Jerusalem. The island underwent a period of great cultural renaissance. Greek, Latin and Arabic were the official languages. Frederick 2nd was a generous patron of all the arts. The first poem in the Italian vulgar language was written at his Court by Ciullo D'Alcamo. In 1250 Frederick 2nd died. His bastard son Manfredi inherited the kingdom, followed by Conrardin.

13th – 15th Centuries – Angevin and Aragonese Sicily:

In 1268 the Hohenstufen heir to the throne, Conrardin, was beaten in the battle of Tagliacozzo by Charles d'Anjou, Count of Provence, exponent of the Guelf party (supporters of the pope's supremacy over the Germanic Emperor). On the 31st March 1282 the Sicilian Vespers revolution took place led by John of Procida, ex-chancellor of Manfredi and thus exponent of the Ghibelin party (supporters of the Germanic Emporor's supremacy over the pope). The Angevins were chased from the island, which passed into the hands of the Aragon dynasty. Peter 3rd, Manfredi's son-in-law, became the new king. In 1302, with the peace of Caltabellotta, Frederic of Aragon was crowned King of Trinacria. In the middle of the 14th C the “black death” (plague) ravaged the island. Civil War commenced among the feudal lords, who divided into factions and supported different heirs to the throne. In 1409 Sicily came under the direct rule of Martin of Aragon. In 1442 Alfonso of Aragon conquered Naples. The ‘Two Sicilies’ (Southern Italy and Sicily) were now entirely Spanish. The economy in this period establishes itself as based on wheat exportation to Spain and Africa. Sicily becomes part of the Aragonese Mediterranean Empire and was ruled by the Viceroy.

16th – 19th Centuries ; Spanish Sicily – The Kingdom of the Two Sicilies:

In 1487 the Holy Inquisition was introduced to Sicily. In 1492 the Jews were expelled from Sicily. Under the Viceroy feudal lords were granted large autonomy. They reinforced their local authority, their personal power grew, and the Church and Inquisition benefited from exorbitant privileges and accumulated immense fortunes. Economic policy under Philip 2nd and Charles 5th brought the island to disastrous conditions of poverty. Lands were left barren, Saracen pirates raided the coasts and the starving population withdrew from the coasts. Commercial contact with North Africa was interrupted. In 1503 the ‘Disfida di Barletta’ (Challenge of Barletta) and the battle of the Garigliano took place: after an attempted coup by the Sicilian Barons aligned with Charles 8th (Angevin King of France), Sicily was incorporated into the reign of Spanish King Ferdinand ‘The Catholic’. In the 17th – 18th C feudal privileges oppressed the vast peasant population, which dwelt in miserable living conditions. Excessive taxation caused revolts in Palermo (lead by La Pilosa and D’Alesi) and Naples (lead by Masaniello). They were bloodily repressed. From 1799 to 1808 Naples underwent its ‘décennie française’ (French Decade), being occupied by French troops. The Bourbon court was transferred to Palermo. In Naples, Joachim Murat and Joseph Bonaparte attempted to establish a Republic based on the principles of the French Revolution. The Bourbons soon struck back with English aid: the ships of Admiral Nelson (1801). Through the Congress of Vienna (1814-15) the Bourbons fully regained the Kingdom of Naples. In 1812 under Bourbon rule and with the influence of Lord Bentinck a new Constitution was established. Although its life was brief (2-3 years), this was an important step towards the abolishment of feudal privileges. In 1848 what is known as the Sicilian Revolution took place against Bourbon rule and in favour of the Kingdom of Italy. On 11th of May 1860 Garibaldi with his ‘one thousand men’ (I Mille) disembarked in Marsala (westernmost point of the island) to ‘liberate’ Sicily from the much-hated Bourbon oppression. With a huge popular consensus which brought many voluntary fighters to join him and under the protection and auspices of imperial Britain, Garibaldi overcame the Bourbon Army. The following year Sicily was annexed to the Kingdom of Italy under the rule of Victor Emanuel 2nd of Savoy.

c. Causes for emigration (Marcello Saija):

This is a translation of an extract from the visitor's pamphlet guide to the exhibition which accompanied and was opened contemporarily to the Conference on Sicilian Emigration in the world, written by Marcello Saija (author's translation).

The term ‘emigration’ has always evoked images of men dressed in rags who, whilst standing and holding improvised “cardboard and thread” suitcases, wait resigned for immense steamboats. Whoever has attempted to find the causes of this phenomenon has put forward exclusively the reason as being economic crisis which, drastically reducing the possibility of employment, would have been the cause responsible for the expulsion of entire families, who were forced to emigrate against their will, almost like an exodus. Economic depression and miserable living conditions among the working class, however, have been endemic conditions in the island for centuries. Why had then mass migration only occurred in the decades bridging the Nineteenth and Twentieth centuries? Which were then the decisive factors that provoked it? The modernisation of transport in the second half of the Nineteenth century entailed a revolution in the economy and shortened the distances between the continents; emigration patterns spread in Sicily, creating a proper emigration culture in itself, diffused through a capillary network of agents and sellers of the American Dream. Hence, the expulsion and integration processes interacted and provoked timid departures at the start, followed shortly tough by an uncontrollable flood in the first two decades of the Twentieth century. There were different reactions to the state of affairs. Folk living in large estates (Latifondi) left before folk living in areas specialized in the farming particular produces. Later Departures occurred from areas where small and medium land properties were well entrenched. Progressively, though, in the space of few years, all these “Sicilies” blend and it is difficult to perceive the differences. After the end of the Second World War, the migration phenomenon started again in a flood from all over island. The prevalent destination was now Australia for precise reasons: after 1945 a world struck by famine demanded grocery products. Australia was a primary supplier of such products and needed to support its rapidly expanding industrial economy and its agricultural economy. In 1947 minister Arthur Calwell announced officially that Australia was to open its doors to European emigration. It was in this way that, between 1947 and 1971 the country was involved in the most stimulating and modern experiment of social engineering of the world. Offices for emigration to Australia were opened everywhere in Europe. An extremely positive and even utopian image of the favourable economic conditions in Australia was presented. The fare for the sea passage to Australia was brought down to only 10 pounds. In March 1951 Italy and Australia sign the Assisted Migration Agreement, through which each party, with the support of international agencies sponsored by the American government, committed itself to financing the passage of Italian emigrants. Hence, Australia suddenly became less distant from Sicily, and the new restrictions adopted by American legislation on emigration, contributed to enhance the migrants' flux towards the new continent (Saija, 2005).

Jurnata ‘n Sicilia:

Quannu lu Suli spunta ‘nto mari d’ a Sicilia
 Tutti li cori si inchinu d’ amuri
 E picchi simu vera ggenti di la terra nostra
 Priamu lu Signuri chi porta paci e amuri

Versu lu menzujornu ‘nta la chiazza
 Li vecchiareddi si fannu la partitedda alli carti
 E vivunu chillu vinu binidittu
 Ca di li mani so’ fu fatto

Verso la sira

Cu lu suduri di la frunti
 Zappandu tuttu lu iornu
 Sentunu di luntanu na campana sunari
 E di riverenza lu cappeddu si levanu

Nta la notti lu cielu si inchi di stiddi e lu mare cancia culuri
 L’ innamurati fannu l’ amuri
 E sirinati li chitarreddi fannu

Chistu e’ lu ricurdu di la Sicilia mia
 Ora cas sugnu nta sta terra luntana
 Nto cori aiu ancura l’ amuri di la genti e di tutti li parenti

M.2. Table analysing contents of M.1.

I shall here comment on the songs I classified in the tables above, the second (M.2.) being analytical table based on the data presented in M.1. I have classified the songs per genre and listed how many of the songs are included in each. Here below I shall start analysing the songs I listed starting from the most numerous per genre, going down to the single cases. I shall try and understand why these songs have been included in a show which presents itself as ‘Italian’ and attempt to draw the connection between the different songs. In doing so, my aim will be to show how, apparently ‘out of theme’ (such as western or Broadway) songs have been included in the repertoire, hence retracing the path of associations which are common in the identity of Italian-Australians. The analysis of this path of associations is further expanded in Chapter 5, where I will consider all the types of music I have found throughout my thesis, relating to Italian identity and involving Sicilian musicians.

1) Italian-American – 7 songs Observing the above table and analysis, we can see how predominant the Italian-American influence is in the repertoire of songs Nadia Piave and Glenn Amer presented. 7 or more songs are either written by Italian-Americans, or have been performed and adopted by Italian-Americans for decades. Some originally Italian songs have become so American that their text has been changed into an English one, such as ‘Sole mio’ on the notes of which Dean Martin wrote his new crooner-style composition, ‘There’s no tomorrow’. ‘O sole mio’ was also performed by Elvis Presley.

2) Broadway – 5 songs The second classification to show up is that of Broadway productions. As we can see, though, only 2 songs out of the 5 listed aren’t connected somehow to ‘Italianess’, in one form or the other. Hence we can justify the presence of Broadway productions because of their frequent associations with ‘Italianess’.

3) Italy of ‘La Dolce Vita’ – 5 songs Italy as represented in cinema, in particular by Federico Fellini.: (5 songs)

- ‘Vacanze Romane’ – song which refers to the 1953 Classic film, starring Audrey Hepburn and Gregory Peck
- ‘Roma non fa’ la stupida stasera’ (Rome, don’t be stupid tonight) – written by roman screen music composer Armando Trovajoli, active in Italian cinema of the 50s and 60s
- ‘Don’t say “I love you” – Ti voglio bene’ and ‘Be Italian’, by Maury Yeston, both

From his musical Nine (1982), a Broadway musical production inspired by Federico Fellini's famous autobiographical film, 8 ½ (1963).

- 'Mambo Italiano' sung by Sophia Loren in the American film It started in Naples (1960), starring also Clark Gable and Vittorio De Sica filmed in Rome, Naples and Capri.

4) Italy/USA pop music between the 50's and 70's – 4 songs The Carpenters and Roy Orbison were included in the repertoire purely for a generational and cultural reasons. Italian and American culture in the 60s and 70s were in total osmosis: they fed off one another. Non-Italian related songs as these, much as the Broadway non-directly Italian-related material, are included because of the general closeness and influence of the two entertainment industries. 'Il Tango delle Rose' is a typical example of Italian-American share. As we can see, 'Mambo Italiano' shares many categories.

5), 7) and 8) Canzone Napoletana/Opera/Crooners – 5 songs The third classification ranking is that of songs from the Canzone Napoletana, Opera and related Crooner style singing (all combined). Canzone Napoletana and Opera can also be considered Italian-American, given the immense popularity that in the first decades of the 20th C Italian Tenor legends, such as Enrico Caruso and Beniamino Gigli, Mario Lanza and Tito Schipa had in the USA and South America, especially among the immense Southern-Italian Diaspora living there. The repertoire these great tenors sang also included songs about Italian migration, which have become everlasting classics and epitomes of Italianess, i.e. 'Santa Lucia lontana' (Santa Lucia far away), 'Addio Mia Bella Napoli' (Farewell my beautiful Naples), 'Torna a Surriento' (Come back to Sorrento). Remembering a romanticised, far away Italy became such a cliché that Italian-American pop singer Perry Como wrote an original song, 'Souvenir d'Italie' (Remembrance of Italy).

6) Tango – 3 songs Argentina's to date population is 38.592.150 people of which roughly 500.000 are Italian citizens, while the population of Italian descent is estimated being around 16.000.000, a figure which is only surpassed by the USA and Brasil. These figures alone can tell us how much the Italian culture has influenced Argentinean since the earliest days (second half 19th C). An analogue phenomenon to the USA happened with Argentina in feedback culture to Italy. Tango became popular in Italy contemporaneously to its birth and spread throughout Argentina.

9), 10) 2 songs As for Country-Western style ‘Ghost riders in the sky’, its inclusion was because of association with Vaughn Monroe and Broadway, of whom I have said. Giovanni Legrenzi’s ‘Che fiero costume’, is a song from the 17th C, known as the Baroque era in art. It was part of an Opera called Eteocle e Polinice, written in 1675. It was included as Baroque Operas where the first Operas; the ‘grandparents’ of the modern 19th C classics. Also, this is the only example of art music in the concert, reminding people that Italy is also, most of all, the land of artistic genius and taste.
